Education

Freie Universität Berlin      Ph.D. Political Science      2019-present

Dissertation: Intra-Party Factions & Inter-Party Polarization in U.S. Congressional Primaries: How Ideological & Factional Primaries Influence Candidate Positions

Supervisors: Christian Lammert, Sean M. Theriault, and Max Steinhardt

The thesis demonstrates changes in the dynamics of competition, offering evidence that between 2006 and 2020 ideological differences between candidates proximate to competing factions became the dominant narrative in congressional primaries, first in the Republican and then in the Democratic Party. I consider causes of this development and implications in terms of the selective and adaptive polarizing effects, empirically testing if primaries reward ideologically extreme candidates in the 21st century. Taking a contest-centered approach, the thesis foregrounds the dynamics of and reasons for primary competitions to better understand the implications for inter-party polarization. In doing so, the thesis demonstrates that trends of intra-party factionalism during the congressional nomination process influence partisan polarization.

Freie Universität Berlin      MA North American Studies (1.0)      2017-2019

The MA study focused primarily within the discipline of political science, but also included courses in cultural studies and interdisciplinary classes. The thesis focused on the topic of polarization in the U.S. Congress and received the highest grade of 1.0.

University of Exeter      BA Hons Politics (2:1)      2005-2008

The BA program gave a broad introduction to the discipline of political science, the dissertation focused on media representations of the U.S. presidency and received a 1st class grade.
